(from a poem about a rose)

But dreams may linger on, and dreamily
In longing, retrospectively we see
The yellow clay from which you sprang.
The shrub, the foliage of the tree
And then above, the perfect blossom;
Thus may we, when from the tree of life
We're severed quite,
Across the stormy garden of our past
Leave kindness petals
Which our friends may see
And from them build a rose of memory.

—Dr. G. A. Smith
